

PAM FOX

I have been drawing and painting most of my life and have a passion for portraits. Over the years I have been fortunate enough to win several first prizes and other awards for my paintings and was selected as a finalist for the RSASA portrait prize. A portrait I did of an orangutan from the Adelaide zoo was used as the title in ABC series "Great Expectations" that went to air July 2013.

As a member of Henley and Grange Art Society, I was fortunate enough to receive tutoring from South Australian artist and teacher – Trent Duffy. This was for a period of approximately 10 years and included all mediums and techniques such as still life and life drawing.

I work with oil and water paints but my favourite medium is watercolour. I love to do portraits of people and animals but am prepared to tackle any subject.

When creating artwork, I enjoy the relaxed feeling of being in another world and capturing an expression I am looking for.

I get ideas about what to paint from my imagination of something I have seen and loved.

Gratitude is expressed through my artwork by bringing out the best I can see in the subject through expression , colour, light and shade from nature.
